

BSIA Apprentice Installer Award winners 2009

Sponsored by Dedicated Micros

Liam Roddis (overall winner)

Liam Roddis, 21, has always been interested in electronics and pursued an apprenticeship with Chubb Electronic Security Ltd upon leaving school, hoping to 'make a difference' in his chosen industry. Liam is now an integral part of the team in Sheffield where he is based. His drive, determination, work ethic and maturity have all been described as characteristics which put him ahead of his peers and which he should be proud of. Liam demonstrates huge amounts of initiative, offers excellent customer service and understands the requirements of his role, working to meet them as best he can. Liam was nominated for his award for the hard work and excellent performance he has demonstrated throughout his apprenticeship, something of which Chubb is very proud.

Chris Tinsley (national winner)

Chris Tinsley, 20, was nominated by Tensor plc for the continued dedication and enthusiasm he shows to all jobs that are given to him. Chris is said to have grasped the technical side of the equipment he works with like a 'duck to water', now providing training/advice on products to other engineers who are not as familiar with them. Chris is a valued member of the team who excels with his positive attitude, logical thinking and a desire to perform his role to the highest standard possible. He has a keenness to learn new skills on both the installation and maintenance side of his work.
